Concept Question 7-10: Is it possible to construct a circuit composed solely of capacitors and inductors such that the impedance of the overall combination has a nonzero real part? Explain.

No, it is not possible. Since the impedances of capacitors and inductors have zero real parts, it is not possible to combine multiple capacitors and inductors and end up with a nonzero real part.